RE: Agenda Item H.3 – Southern Resident Killer Whale Endangered Species Act Consultation

Dear Chair Gorelnik, Council Members and Mr. Thom:

We, the following 552 individuals, add our voices to the tens of thousands of people from across the United States urging you to protect Southern Resident orca. As fishery managers responsible for the management of ocean salmon fisheries off the U.S. West Coast, you play an important role in both salmon and Southern Resident orca recovery. Given the continued decline of endangered Southern Resident orcas and the failure to meet recovery goals, broad, bold and comprehensive actions are now needed. While not easy, this includes adoption of precautionary conservation and management measures that minimize ocean salmon fishery impacts.

Southern Resident orcas living off the coast of Washington, Oregon, California and British Columbia now number only 72 individuals, the lowest in 44 years. The lack of adequate prey is the primary threat to their recovery. On average 99 percent of the Southern Resident orca diet is salmon, particularly Chinook salmon. Many Chinook salmon populations are threatened with extinction and it is estimated that 40 percent of wild Chinook populations from the U.S. Pacific Northwest and California are already extinct. To add insult to injury, Chinook salmon on the West Coast are getting smaller, making it harder for the orcas to meet their dietary needs. As such, some orcas are literally starving to death and the stress associated with not enough food to eat is affecting the orcas' ability to reproduce.

While there are many reasons salmon are in decline, reducing directed ocean salmon fishing and protecting the orcas' foraging hotspots are important measures that can be taken now to increase prey availability. We urge the Pacific Fishery Management Council and National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) to address Southern Resident orca recovery and minimize risk by taking the following actions:

1. Adopt a critical Chinook salmon abundance threshold below which would trigger reduced Pacific Ocean salmon fishery catch limits and time and area closures.
2. For the associated time and area closures, adopt the high use ocean foraging areas that were proposed last year by NMFS for designation as Southern Resident orca critical habitat. These orca feeding areas should close when the threshold limit is triggered.
3. Update the Pacific Coast Salmon Fishery Management Plan with an objective of managing and regulating salmon fisheries in a manner that accounts for the needs of Southern Resident orcas and ensures their protection into the future.

Southern Resident orca and wild salmon recovery requires solutions that are big, bold and comprehensive. We ask that you make responsible fishery management part of the solution. While advancing conservation in ocean salmon fisheries, we encourage your continued support for other state and federal actions to recover Southern Resident orcas and wild salmon, like habitat restoration and dam removal.

Thank you for your attention to this very important issue.

Sincerely,
