

Make Sure Endangered Orcas Have Enough to Eat

November 6, 2020

We, the 2,976 undersigned, urge the Pacific Fishery Management Council to set a higher salmon-abundance threshold to protect the orcas while the "Ad Hoc Southern Resident Killer Whale Workgroup" continues its analysis.

Southern Resident killer whales are facing imminent extinction. Thankfully we have reason to celebrate in 2020 with the birth of two new calves and another pregnant orca. However, this welcome news makes it even more urgent to protect these orcas and ensure they have enough salmon to eat.

The current alternatives the council is considering don't go nearly far enough to protect the orcas' preferred food source — so you must develop and adopt a stronger alternative.

Specifically a higher salmon-abundance threshold must be set to protect the orcas while the "Ad Hoc Southern Resident Killer Whale Workgroup" continues its analysis. If salmon numbers fall below the threshold, the council should have defined fisheries-management measures automatically triggered. And your council, the National Marine Fisheries Service, and the working group must improve salmon monitoring and management to benefit these whales.

Please — do everything in your power to strengthen these rules and protect orcas.
