RE: Agenda Item J.3 — Scoping an Amendment Authorizing Shallow-Set Longline Gear Outside of the Exclusive Economic Zone

Dear Chair Anderson, Council Members, Mr. Thom, Secretary Crowfoot, and Director Bonham:

We value sustainably caught seafood and commend the September decision by the Pacific Fishery Management Council (Council) to authorize deep-set buoy gear—a selective method to successfully catch swordfish while avoiding harm to marine mammals and sea turtles. Given this transition toward ecological sustainability in the fishery, it would be counterproductive and imprudent to consider creating permits for a highly destructive and wasteful gear type—pelagic longlines. As such, we write to express our strong opposition to any further consideration of a West Coast permitted pelagic longline fishery inside or outside the U.S. Exclusive Economic Zone.

California's ocean ecosystem contains among the highest marine mammal densities on earth, is home to international nursery areas for sharks, is an important feeding destination for critically endangered leatherback sea turtles and is simply too important to ruin with harmful indiscriminate fishing gear. Pelagic longlines have been banned off the West Coast for more than four decades for good reason. The last time pelagic longlines were tested off California in 2011, more than 40 sharks were caught for every swordfish and over three quarters of the fish caught were unmarketable species. Last year, the state of California passed the groundbreaking Senate Bill 1017 which creates a transition program to phase out the use of swordfish drift gillnets. Pelagic longlines are similarly wasteful, are known to kill multiple endangered species, and for some species like sharks and turtles have even worse impacts than drift gillnets.

Off Hawaii, the shallow-set pelagic longline fishery was shut down early this year for catching too many North Pacific loggerhead sea turtles. This is the second consecutive year the fishery has exceeded the number of sea turtles it can legally injure or kill under the Endangered Species Act. With too many sea turtles already being caught, it does not make sense to permit a pelagic longline fishery off the West Coast that could further jeopardize loggerhead sea turtles and critically endangered Pacific leatherback sea turtles.

We implore you not to entertain any future possibility of permitting or conducting future experiments with this wasteful fishing gear off the West Coast and hope that you will instead work to build on the success of deep-set buoy gear and phase out federal drift gillnets consistent with California law.

Sincerely,

19,936 Individuals of the United States and U.S. Territories
