

New Measures Needed to Ensure the Health of Salmon and Orcas

September 1, 2020

Re: Southern Resident Killer Whale Endangered Species Act Consultation, Docket #H3

We, the 10,092 undersigned, urge you to vote to consider the following action alternatives to protect Southern Resident killer whales from the impacts of ocean salmon harvest:

- I. The council should consider action alternatives with automatic triggers to close the ocean salmon fishery in designated and proposed critical habitat for these killer whales if the health of the fish or orcas doesn't meet certain levels.
 - When low abundance makes it clear that insufficient salmon will be available, the fisheries should be closed in the areas deemed most important for the whales.
 - Management actions should also be tied to indicators of orcas' health. That means continued decline in orca abundance, photos of "peanut head," and/or elevated levels of stress hormones in orca fecal samples should trigger actions to reduce the salmon harvest and thereby ease pressure on the whales.
- II. Importantly the council's action alternatives should include fishery monitoring and data-collection improvements to fill knowledge gaps that hinder effective management of this mixed-stock fishery.
 - Genetic testing of all salmon harvested more than three nautical miles from shore is needed to understand which salmon stocks are being caught and to provide closer to real-time information about their abundance. Until that testing is available, all salmon catch should be in the zone within three nautical miles of shore.
 - Harvest should be moved closer to the salmon stocks' terminal rivers to assess how much catch is from each stock.

As you know, federal scientists expect Southern Resident killer whales to continue to decline over the next 50 years — that means drastic conservation measures are needed now. Please take all necessary actions to conserve this critically imperiled species knowing you have our full support.
